50TH ANNIVERSARY OF SILICON VALLEY

AND THE PAST & FUTURE OF MTN. VIEW'S EAST WHISMAN AREA

OUR WINTER 2021 EVENT

50 years ago, a front-page article in Electronic News bestowed upon our area what has proved to be an enduring nickname: "Silicon Valley." To celebrate this milestone, we are very excited to welcome David Laws from the Computer History Museum, Nikki Lowy from Google, and Brooke Ray Smith from Lendlease as our guest speakers at our Winter 2021 Membership Meeting & Event. Mr. Laws will share a presentation on the history of Silicon Valley and the role companies in Mountain View's East Whisman District played during the early years of the valley's role as the center of the technology industry. Ms. Lowy and Ms. Smith will then offer us a glimpse into the East Whisman's future and share information on Google's long-term plans for the reimagining and redevelopment of this area rich in Silicon Valley history. This event is free to MVHA members and open to non-members with a small suggested donation.

OUR GUEST SPEAKERS

DAVID LAWS

Based on his fifty-year career in marketing and general management roles for Silicon Valley high-tech companies, David Laws tells stories of the pioneering days of the computer chip business. He serves as semiconductor curator for the Computer History Museum and his work has appeared in numerous broadcast, electronic, and print media outlets from the BBC and NPR, to mobile apps, guidebooks, newspapers, magazines, and academic journals,

NIKKI LOWY

BROOKE RAY SMITH

Nikki Lowy and Brooke Ray Smith are the Community Engagement Managers for Google's East Whisman and North Bayshore projects. Nikki has a background in partnership development, working at the intersection of real estate and education. Prior to joining Google, Nikki worked with local school districts to help educators buy homes and build financial security.

Brooke Ray is with Lendlease, Google's real estate development partner helping Google fulfill its regional $1B housing commitment to build 20,000 new homes across the Bay Area. Brooke Ray has a background in public placemaking and community engagement, having led nonprofits focused on creating and improving parks and public spaces in San Francisco, and prior to that working with a creative investment group focused on making downtown Los Altos more vibrant.

News & Notes

President's Message

By Pamela Baird
MVHA President

Pamela Baird

An unanticipated phone call from Emily Ramos has started a more intensive phase of my membership in the Mountain View Historical Association- that of President! My husband and I have been MVHA life members since 2014 when we first joined. Out of the blue she asked me to join the Board as the President. After a bit of consideration I agreed.

Although I haven't previously served on the Board, I am committed to continuing the great work done by Nick Perry, the past president, and the previous and current Board members. It's a great group of knowledgeable and engaged people.

My interest in the history of Mountain View is generated by my general curiosity of history, historical sites and how people make and shape their environments. I grew up in Arvada, Colorado, a suburb west of Denver. Its history isn't that different from that of Mountain View.

Gold was discovered in the streams and mountains to the west. And like what happened in California, the rich bottomland soil of nearby streams convinced miners to become farmers. The laying of railroad tracks spurred the creation of the town that was later named Arvada, which became a small vibrant agricultural area. The little town had a prosperous downtown of wood framed houses and brick commercial buildings. Arvada even claimed the title "Celery Capital of the World."

And like Mountain View, the old downtown area deteriorated in the 1970s & 1980s when major shopping centers were built in other parts of town. But in the early 2000s an effort was made to restore and improve the old downtown district. After years of effort "Old Town Arvada" is now listed on the National Register of Historic Places. https://oldetownarvada.org/

This is not to say that the same can or should be accomplished here, but that MVHA has a part to play in preserving the past and the current as well. In this issue you will find an article about "History Happening Now", which we hope will be a regular feature. Notable current events should be recognized, as they will be considered "history" sometime in the near or distant future.

Last year several weeks before the COVID-19 pandemic changed everything members of MVHA met in a workshop to determine the goals of the group. A number of wonderful ideas were developed, but COVID-19 has curtailed some of the suggestions. Nonetheless, there are some things that can be a focus of our efforts as a group. New members are an important component of any organization and so we will be reaching out to other groups and individuals to increase membership and participation. Planning for interviews of more participants in the "Oral History" project can be done now, with interviews to be done over Zoom or in person when that is allowed. Lastly, we hope to increase community awareness of MVHA with increased postings on social media.

Please join us for the next virtual meeting on February 14. It will be an interesting program on the past and future of the East Whisman area of Mountain View.

See you then,

—Pamela

MVHA Board Changes

By Nicholas Perry
MVHA Past President

The new year brings some new faces to our Board of Directors, as well as familiar faces in new roles.

IdaRose Sylvester

In addition to our new president, Pamela Baird, we are very excited to welcome IdaRose Sylvester as our new Membership Committee Chair! IdaRose has lived in Mountain View for over 20 years, and is fascinated by the rapid change the city has gone through, and the commitment to community the city has. She holds an MBA, and previously ran her own consulting firm, and now runs her nonprofit, Appetite for Good. She chairs Mountain View's Human Relations Commission, and is involved in several civic organizations helping protect and define the city's future. She loves studying the past to see what lessons we can bring to the future. Prior to joining our Board, IdaRose facilitated the MVHA's 2020 Vision retreat last March so she's already received a crash-course in the many great ideas we have for advancing our organization's mission. Welcome, IdaRose! And a big thanks to our out-going Membership Committee Chair, Lisa Garcia. We are glad to have Lisa remain on the board as a Director-at-Large. Marina Marinovich, who most recently served as one of Directors-at-Large, has agreed to resume her role as our Publicity Committee Chair.

We also are wishing a fond farewell to Melissa Wright, our Historical Data Committee Chair. During her time with our Board, Melissa did a phenomenal job completely rebuilding the MVHA website and helping us enroll and take advantage of a variety of technological platforms, like Google Suite. She graciously agreed to continue to provide us with advice on our website from afar. Thank you, Melissa! Stepping in for Melissa as Our Historical Data Chair is our previous Past President and Mountain View History Center librarian, Candace Bowers. Candace continues a long and fruitful collaboration between library staff and our association.

Everyone else on the Board has agreed to retain their previous positions, and I look forward to volunteering with all of them in my new role as Past President. As always, we want to hear from our members. If you have ideas you want to share or want to get more involved in the MVHA, please email us at info@mountainviewhistorical.org.

Chickcen sculptures at the new Wynadotte Park

New Park Reflects Fowl History

By Pamela Baird
MVHA President

The City of Mountain View recently opened a new park in an area of town that doesn't have much park space. Located at 2254 Wyandotte Street, the park is nearly an acre of land. Prior to its construction the city conducted several community outreach meetings to encourage residents to have input in the design and naming of Wyandotte Park. During the meetings several residents encouraged the city to recognize the history of the area around the park- that of chicken farms!

For many years this area was outside of the city limits and contained properties where chickens were raised for meat and eggs. The area was nicknamed "Chickentown". Streets on both sides of Rengstorff were named for breeds of chickens-Leghorn, Plymouth, Wyandotte and Colony.

The Wyandotte breed of chickens was developed in New York state in the 1880's. They are named after an American Indian tribe that inhabited New York and Canada. As a breed Wyandotte chickens are generally very docile, friendly and easily handled. They are raised for both meat and eggs.
City Council decided to add a budget for public art in this park. The Visual Arts Committee was tasked with developing ideas for the artwork. Owls were originally suggested, but participants of the original outreach meetings suggested that chickens would be more appropriate, based on the history of the area. The artwork, entitled "Hello Chicken" was created by WOWHAUS (Scott Constable & Ene Osteraas-Constable).

The new park features play and fitness equipment, green open space, bike racks and five chicken sculptures. What a fun way to give a nod to a part of history that few people know.

Catli's Oriental Market

Multicultural Flavor Purveyors in Silicon Valley, 1970 – 1980

By Bev Catli Manzano
Special Guest Contributor

My parents Steve and Lily Catli started our family business, Catli's Oriental Market in 1970 when I was 8 years old. It was in the new strip mall halfway between downtown Mountain View and the Moffett Field Naval Station on Moffett Boulevard. The market was the first of its kind in our area.

Our store stood out from other Asian markets in the vicinity because we sold specialty items used in Southeast- and South-Asian cuisine, including the fresh vegetables, fruits, and fish you wouldn't usually find under one roof (except perhaps in San Francisco). We carried everything from mangos, shrimp chips, rice noodles, sweet rice cakes, bok choy, lemon grass, cassava root, and grass jelly, to milkfish. Some of these items may not sound that unusual today, but in the early 70s, they were not on the radar for most Americans. Especially coveted by our customers were the unique seasonings that provided their regional flavor profiles, such as bagoong, sambal oelek, nuoc mam, and cardamom, to name a few.

In those years, the demographics were quickly shifting in America. The US Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1965 increased quotas, putting an end to earlier restrictions. The aim of the new law was to reunite immigrant families and attract more skilled labor into the country. That legislation—combined with the meteoric growth of the high-tech industry in Silicon Valley—amassed a multicultural melting pot in the Bay Area. Many people immigrated who filled the ranks of tech companies, especially on the semiconductor assembly lines.

My parents are from the Philippines, which was a US territory in the first half of the 20th century. English is one of the two official languages in the Philippines, and is taught in school. Because of the close tie between the two countries, Filipinos had an advantage in becoming citizens even prior to 1965.

My dad worked in the pineapple and sugarcane plantations in Hawaii from 1946-1953 since there were very few job opportunities in the Philippines after World War II. He then joined the US Army, where he earned his path to citizenship. My mom traveled all the way from the Philippines to study at Columbia University, New York, on a scholarship. On her way back home after obtaining her Master's Degree, she met my dad in 1955 in San Francisco, and they married after a brief courtship.

Our family eventually settled into a new home in Mountain View in 1965. My parents saw the need for a grocery store where Filipinos like themselves could buy the foods that connected them to their tropical native lands. After opening their doors, the word spread, and soon we had customers from many other countries including Vietnam, Indonesia, Thailand, and India.

Catli's Market became a bustling hub of the community that my mom also served with her real estate, insurance, and travel agencies, and notary public services. I worked in the store, along with my sisters Perla and Mely, and my brother Chris. The experience helped instill our sense of diligence and responsibility from an early age. Owning the store was my parents' American dream, to be self-employed, and to provide a taste of home and comfort to others who also came to this country from far away.

Our store created more exposure for Southeast- and South-Asian flavors, which eventually became more widely accepted and even sought-after by the general public. Before 1970, the restaurants around town were primarily American, Italian, Chinese, and Mexican. Diversity in local dining options began to increase when Mekong Restaurant, the first Vietnamese eatery in the South Bay opened in 1971. We supplied ingredients for the popular and elegant Vietnamese-French fusion establishment that used to be on Castro Street.

One day, a Naval officer from Moffett Field came into our store asking if we could make lumpia, the Filipino style of eggroll, for their upcoming officers' club meeting. He and many of his fellow officers had developed a taste for the savory appetizer when they were stationed in the Philippines. My mom catered her delicious lumpia for their events from then on. My sisters and I used to help her roll the filling made of stir-fried meat and vegetables into the paper-thin wrappers—a task which required a lot of experience and patience.

After 10 years as successful entrepreneurs, my parents sold the business in 1980 when they moved to Arizona. Another family took over Catli's Market, which they operated under a different name for several years after. I stayed in the Bay Area to attend college, and my siblings who were already settled remained as well. Our mom sold real estate in the Phoenix area, which was supposed to become the next Silicon Valley, although that didn't happen as predicted for a variety of reasons. Our parents operated another Asian grocery there on a smaller scale in a merchant marketplace, then relocated to Oregon before returning back to Mountain View in their later years.

Catli's Oriental Market is long gone (like the use of the outdated term "Oriental"). In its place is now a beauty salon where I visited after all these years. I noted the walls were the colors of the fruit we once sold: mango and papaya. I went in for a pedicure and reclined in the mechanical massage chair, reminiscing about toiling in that very space.

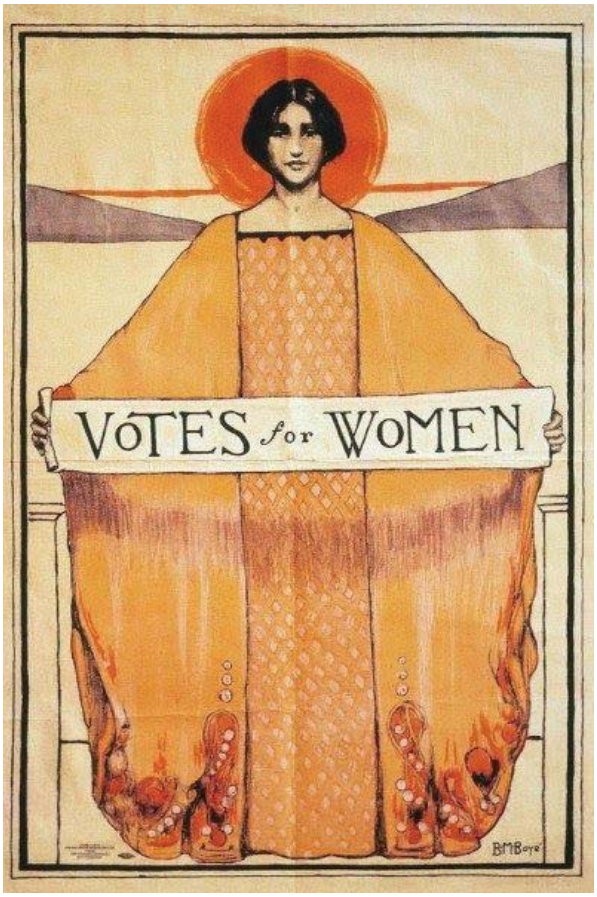

My parents are gone as well. But they left a lasting legacy. Working in our store gave me and my siblings character and a lifetime of stories. The Filipino-American community they helped to foster is strong and engaged in broader society, while looking back to its roots. On a larger scale, I believe my parents were forerunners of the much-celebrated multicultural food scene that has become synonymous with the San Francisco Bay Area. They knew that good food brings everyone together, and that holds true to this day.

Fall 2020 Event Recap

"Votes for MV Women" Suffrage meeting November 1

The latest virtual meeting of the MVHA had a different format- a taped presentation covering the suffrage efforts of Mountain View women prepared by Pamela Baird. Then Nick Perry and Pamela reviewed photos and locations of some of the historical sites and people mentioned in the presentation. This was followed by a review by Dr. Amy Ellison, curator of the exhibit on the 100th anniversary of Suffrage at the Los Altos History Museum. A questions and answers discussion followed.

The genesis of the presentation was research that Pamela did for the suffrage exhibit at the Los Altos History Museum. She reviewed many issues of the Mountain View Register-Leader newspaper at the History Center in the MV Library. Pamela was surprised to learn how active local women were in the 1911 suffrage effort to pass an amendment to the California state constitution granting women the right to vote. She thought "here is a story to tell" and proceeded to do more research, both online and through the city archives.

A twenty minute presentation is the result of the research, which is available for viewing on the MVHA website: www.mountainviewhistorical.org

History Happening Now

Editor's Note: In this new feature, the MVHA will report on history-making events taking place in Mountain View right now. We hope our members will enjoy this feature, especially those who've moved away and want to stay abreast on what's happening in Mountain View today.

Mountain View's new Deputy Police Chief, Jessica Nowaski

By Pamela Baird
MVHA President

Jessica Nowaski appointed first female Deputy Police Chief

Recently, Jessica Nowaski was promoted to the role of Deputy Police Chief. She will be the first woman on the Mountain View Police Department to serve in this role.

Deputy Police Chief Jessica Nowaski joined as a Police Officer in 1995. She served as a Field Training Officer, detective, hostage negotiator, bike patrol officer and peer counselor. In 2008 she was promoted to sergeant. Jessica was moved up to lieutenant in 2011, where she served as a Watch Commander, crisis negotiations team commander, and as Commander of the Santa Clara County Regional Auto Theft Task Force. In 2014 Jessica was promoted to Police Captain. Since then she has commanded the Special Operations and Field Operations divisions, as well as managed the dispatch center.

Jessica has presented her research on coaching and leadership within law enforcement at two conferences. She holds a Bachelor of Arts Degree in Criminal Justice Administration from Sonoma State University, a Master of Arts in Leadership from St. Mary's College of California, and is a graduate of the Harvard Kennedy School Senior Executives in State and Local Government Program. She was recognized in 2014 with the prestigious ATHENA Award honoring inspirational women leaders.

Congratulations!

Special Feature:
The Garrett Hammell Collection

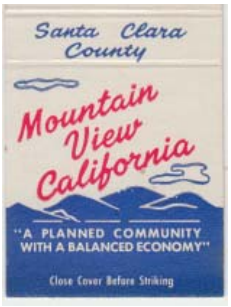

Garrett Hammell loved Mountain View history. As the creator and moderator of the popular Facebook page,"Lost Mountain View" he shared his extensive and ever-growing collection of local history memorabilia with thousands of people daily. Sadly, Garrett passed away on April 9, 2020 at the age of 56.

Garrett Hammell

After Garrett's passing, the MVHA was contacted by his family, who wanted to honor Garrett's wish of seeing his collection donated to our organization. Unfortunately, the pandemic has delayed our official acceptance of the collection due to the on-going closure of the Mountain View Public Library and our archives at the Mountain View History Center.

As an interim step, MVHA Past President Nick Perry and Ways & Means Committee Chair Mark Perry spent a full-day sorting through and organizing the collection, currently housed in a storage facility rented by the Hammell family. Due to limited space in our archives, the MVHA cannot accept the entire collection, so Nick and Mark removed the Mountain View-related items from storage and are in the process of sorting through them for eventual incorporation into our archives. They are also working to help connect the Hammell family with the historical associations

Remembrances

Editor's Note: We've decided to share recent obituaries of individuals who played a unique role in Mountain View's history. Space permitting, we will continue to do so in future newsletters. To submit an obituary, email us at newsletter@mountainviewhistorical.org.

Judith Moss, first woman on City Council, 96

Judith Moss, who died on December 13, was born to Louis and Bryna Moss in Brooklyn, NY on July 11, 1924. After receiving her bachelor's degree from Vassar College she joined the Statistical Research Group in the US Navy. After World War II she worked in computers at the Port of New York Authority as the only female hired when few women worked on that field.

Moss, who also earned master's degrees in economics and computer engineering, helped set up the first computer system for the City of Philadelphia. She then became manager of state and local sales for the computer department of General Electric. In 1966 she moved to California to work in Lockheed's information systems.

Later, Moss became Vice Chancellor of the San Francisco Community College District. In 1972 she was the first woman elected to the Mountain View City Council. She served two terms as mayor.

After she retired, she remained active as a member of the Board of Trustees of Foothill-De Anza College. She continued an active life of community volunteerism.

According to her family she had a keen intellect and a sharp sense of humor. Moss, who never married, is survived by five nephews.

Excerpts on Moss from the book, Milestones: A History of Mountain View:

"In 1968, Mountain View resident Judith Moss called the city clerk to inquire about the process of running for political office. The clerk offered to mail Moss some forms. To Moss's surprise, the next morning's newspaper reported that she was running for city council. Moss recalled, "No one ever heard of me. I came out of nowhere. It was a new concept: a professional woman and an apartment dweller" running for Mountain View City Council. She did not win that election, but in 1973 when she ran again, she became the first woman city council member. In 1975, she became the first woman mayor. Ever since, there have been women on the Mountain View City Council."

Robert Burns, former fire chief, 91.

Robert Burns, who died on Oct. 11, was born to Bernard and Mynie Burns on Dec. 12, 1928, in Colorado Springs, Colorado.

He grew up in Berkeley, graduated from St. Mary's High School in 1947 and studied at Mount Angel Abbey in Oregon before enlisting in the Air Force in 1949. Burns married Mary Morse in 1951. He joined the Contra Costa Fire Department in 1955. In 1961 he was hired by the Mountain View Fire Department and became chief in 1976.

He developed a master plan that became a national model, then lectured and consulted widely on master planning, fire loss management and disaster preparedness.

Burns also volunteered with the Boy Scouts Troop 80, March of Dimes, Amigos de La Raza, Catholic Social Services and Bear Valley Volunteer Fire Department. He was preceded in death by his wife of 63 years, Mary, in 2014. He is survived by his seven children and 14 grandchildren.

Frank Hoshida, owner of Bob's Drive-In cleaners, 96

Frank Hoshida, who died on December 12 was born to Juzo and Toku Hoshida on December 30, 1923, in San Jose, CA. He graduated from Mountain View High School.

Hoshida and his family were incarcerated during World War II in the Heart Mountain Internment Camp in Wyoming. Near the end of the war he was drafted into the Army and assigned to the Military Intelligent Service (MIS). When the war ended in 1945 Hoshida was sent with the MIS to Japan.

When he returned to Mountain View, Hoshida worked for his brother Bob at Bob's Drive-In Cleaners. After his brother passed away, Hosida and his wife, Yoshiko Clara, ran the business for 28 years.

Hoshida was an avid supporter of the Mountain View Buddhist Temple. He enjoyed volunteering for the annual Obon Festival.

He was preceded in death by his wife of 59 years, Yoshiko Clara. Hoshida is survived by his two children, five grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.
