The History of Public Safety in Mtn. View

Our Summer 2024 Event

The Mountain View Fire Department and Mountain View Police Department take great pride in their long history of protecting the residents of Mountain View. Fascinating and harrowing stories and photos from their archives offer a unique glimpse into the evolution of Mountain View from a small farming town to a bustling Silicon Valley city. The MVHA is excited to welcome guest speakers from both departments who will share this history at our annual summertime ice cream social. We hope to see you there!

Searching for History? Look Down!

During the early stages of the COVID pandemic, like many people, my husband and I did a lot of walking. We live across the street from the Monta Loma neighborhood. While walking around I noticed that many of the sidewalk sections had a date stamp of 1954 with the name of the contractor that constructed the sidewalks (and probably the asphalt streets as well).

One section in the middle of Victory Street had two dates and contractors. Later, I learned that the Monta Loma neighborhood was built by three companies: Eichler Homes, Mackay Homes and the Mardell Building Company. Walking around in Old Mountain View one can occasionally see date stamps on sidewalks. Many of the sidewalks have been replaced and the new segments do not include date stamps.

Evidently the sidewalks in at least the first three blocks of Castro Street were paved by about 1905. Photos from 1906 show what appear to be concrete sidewalks. A photo from 1895 shows raised wooden sidewalks. Concrete sidewalks are expected to last between 25-80 years depending on the climate and the original installation factors. In our climate, with no snow or extreme temperature conditions, we can expect to have the sidewalks last longer.

According to the Irish Concrete Society, "the birth of modern concrete as we know it today can be attributed to a stonemason from Leeds, England named Joseph Aspdin. He made a new, improved cement in 1824 by heating chalk and clay together then grinding it down to fine powder. He called it Portland Cement due to its resemblance to Portland stone when hardened."

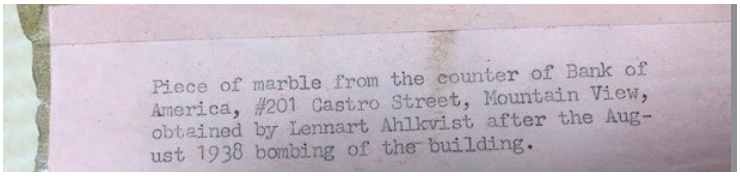

Today concrete is the most widely used construction material in the world. It consists primarily of cement, stone aggregate, sand and water. Other materials can be added to change the color, increase the workability of the product or inhibit corrosion.

Take a walk around your neighborhood—what will you find?

An Intriguing Case in MVPD's History

By Pamela Baird

Piece of marble from the counter of Bank of America, #201 Castro Street, Mountain View, obtained by Lennart Ahlkvist after the August 1938 bombing of the building.

Last year board member Carol Donahue and I were in the Mtn. View History Center looking through its large map and folio cabinet trying to learn more about what contents the cabinet holds. Carol found a small piece of light-colored marble with a label on the back (see above photo). We looked at each other—"a bombing of a bank in Mountain View"? Neither of us had heard anything about this before. Thus began a search to learn more about the incident.

STEACH PRAISED FOR AID IN BOMB ARREST
Bank Officials Credit Tip Given by Local Police as Leading to Quick Arrest and Confession of Louis Cerutti, who Admits Revenge Dynamiting of Bank of America

An online search yielded no results; the Mountain View historic newspaper database—available only at the Mtn. View Library—was necessary to learn more. A full accounting of the incident was found in the August 22, 1938, issue of the Mountain View Register Leader newspaper.

At 3:00 a.m. on the morning of Friday, August 19, 1938, a blast rattled the town. Police Officer Claude Steach (a distant relative of MVHA member Jerry Steach) had just emerged from the Steach Restaurant, where he had enjoyed a cup of coffee (evidently, he served on the night shift). He ran down the street and saw a person hurrying from the side of the Bank of America building (today home of the Red Rock Café). Steach pulled the fire alarm and then fruitlessly searched by car for the suspect.

Steach then joined Mtn. View Fire Department personnel and other curious onlookers to assess the situation. Damage was sustained around the door where the suspect had placed several sticks of dynamite. Windows in the bank building and surrounding stores were blown out. Fortunately, no one was injured. The bank opened the next morning for business as usual. The glass in the windows of the bank and surrounding buildings was quickly replaced.

With the help the Santa Clara County Sheriff's Department, the FBI and a tip provided by Steach, Lorenzo Cerutti, age 50, was arrested several days later. Mr. Cerutti confessed to the bombing. Ten sticks of dynamite were placed against the side door and detonated. His motive was revenge for the foreclosure of his home several years earlier. Evidently townspeople knew of his anger towards the bank and were not surprised that Cerutti was the culprit.

Cerruti was charged with "malicious use of dynamite" and booked into county jail. A month later he was sentenced to serve a term of at least one year in San Quentin Prison.

Nick Perry Receives Preservation Award

By Jerry Steach & Marina Marinovich
MVHA Members

Mtn. View historian Nick Perry was honored recently with a Distinguished Preservation Service Award from the Santa Clara County Preservation Alliance (SCCPA). The award recognizes his years of work preserving Mtn. View history.

Perry joined the MVHA board of directors in 2011, serving over the years as its newsletter editor, vice president, and president. "Through his published works and his tireless contributions to the Mountain View Historical Association, Nick Perry has done more than anyone I've met to preserve the history and heart of the Mountain View community," said Robert Cox, MVHA vice president. Perry was introduced by Cox at the May 17 SCCPA May 17 award ceremonies in San Jose.

Perry is the author of Images of America: Mountain View (2006) and Mountain View: Then & Now (2012). A descendant of Mexican migrant farmworkers and Portuguese immigrants who came to Santa Clara Valley early in the 20th Century, Perry grew up hearing many stories about his hometown's diverse past. As a teenager, those family stories piqued Perry's curiosity and led him to the Mtn. View History Center, where dedicated MVHA volunteers helped him comb the archives to find answers to his questions. Perry shared his research by creating the online Guide to Mountain View—likely the first website ever dedicated to the city's history. His website led to a high school planning internship with the City of Mtn. View and an appointment to the city's first official Youth Advisory Group, the predecessor to today's Youth Advisory Committee.

Perry's curiosity in how cities evolve and how good planning can help shape them into better places led him to attain a Bachelor's in Urban Studies and Master of City Planning degree from UC Berkeley. While in college he stayed active in Mountain View; he was appointed to its 2002 Centennial Celebration planning committee and helped form a non-profit focused on preserving its historic buildings. Since graduating from Cal, he's dedicated his career to projects that preserve and enhance our region's unique sense-of-place. In 2020, after twelve years working as an urban designer for the San Francisco Planning Department, Perry joined the Santa Clara Valley Open Space Authority where he is managing a master plan for the restoration of over 1,500 acres of recently protected open space in Coyote Valley.

Through his books, local history lectures, interpretive signage design, newsletter articles, and historic walking tours, Perry continues to preserve and share local history with the community, giving both newcomers and old-timers new insights and appreciation for our region's dynamic evolution over time.

Our community is very lucky to have such a dedicated and knowledgeable person.

Spring 2024 Event Recap

Stories of Chinese Residents of Mtn. View - Then & Now

A large group of people attended the May 5 quarterly event held at the Senior Center. After a quick review of the early Chinese immigration to California and the resistance they encountered, MVHA President Pamela Baird presented information about the 1882 Chinese Exclusion Act. Those attending could then better understand the stories that would be presented later in the program.

Pamela shared the story of Yuen Lung, who emigrated to Mountain View in 1879 from southeast Cantonese speaking China. Santa Clara County had many Chinese agricultural workers. By some accounts one-third of the agricultural workers in 1880 were Chinese. Yuen acted as a labor broker, store owner, strawberry grower and fruit seller. Later in life Yuen encountered financial difficulties but continued as a business owner. He was a well respected and generous member of the community.

The life of another Chinese immigrant, Thomas Foon Chew, was also profiled. Chew played a significant role in the canning industry, owning facilities in Alviso and Mayfield. His company grew to be the third largest cannery in the US. Chew's untimely death in 1931 at the of age of 42 led to the closing of the company five years later. Historic panels about the company are located in Alviso, a short 15 minute drive away from Mtn. View.

Judy Gee spoke about her father and the history of her family. Her father was a "paper son" who bought papers to enter the US. He had to memorize a huge number of facts to be able to convince immigration authorities that he was able to enter the US in 1924. Her father left China to have a better life for himself and his children.

Judy explained her family's involvement in the popular Mtn. View restaurant Qui Hing Low where Judy, her sister and other relatives also worked. Through her parents' hard work and frugal living, they were able to purchase three homes in Mountain View. Judy is grateful for the many sacrifices her parents endured so that she and her sister could thrive in the US.

The last speaker, Li Zhang, spoke about the current Chinese residents of Mountain View. Many came to the US for a good education and the opportunity to have a different life than that in China. Freedom of expression, religion, education and community were cited by Li as the hallmarks of life in the Bay Area. The recent addition of a Mandarin-language offering for Leadership Mountain View has widened the Mandarin-speaking community's opportunities to participate in civic and public life in Mountain View.

Finding Your Family History

What is a Distant Cousin Anyway?

By Robert Cox
MVHA Vice President

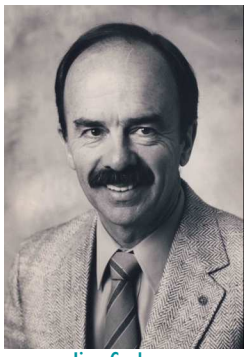

Those who have taken an autosomal DNA test from Ancestry or one of the other major genealogy testing services will get a list of DNA matches as part of their results. These will generally be ranked by the amount of DNA shared between the test taker and each match. Ancestry breaks the matches up into three main groups: Close Family (which generally includes siblings, first cousins, and their parents and children), Extended Family (up to third cousins), and Distant Family (more distant relationships). It is common for many people to have hundreds or even thousands of DNA matches on Ancestry, especially if they have an immigrant ancestor who came to what is now the USA in the 1600s or 1700s.

Autosomal DNA tests, like those provided by Ancestry, can accurately predict relationships between people who are second cousins or closer. For third cousins and beyond, the exact relationship can be hazier. On average, two third cousins will only share 0.78% of their DNA. But the actual amount could be as high as 2.2% or there could be no match at all. So, someone who is a third cousin could appear as a second cousin in a list of DNA matches, if the matches share 2% of their DNA.

The more distant the relationship, the more difficult is it to pin down. That is why Ancestry will denote distant cousins as 3rd-4th cousins, 4th-6th cousins, and 5th-8th cousins. Most fifth cousins will not be DNA matches. Two fifth cousins may share DNA from a common ancestor, but they won't always share the same DNA segments from that ancestor, and in that case, there will be no match.

One way to extend your ability to match up with distant cousins is by collaborating with close relatives who have also taken a DNA test. Ancestry allows two people who have taken their DNA tests to collaborate, i.e. see the DNA matches from each other's tests. I am currently collaborating 10 of my close relatives on Ancestry DNA. This has allowed me to match up a distant cousin Eric Weitzel, with whom I share a common ancestor: John Brisbin (1730-1822). Eric's father was a match to my first cousin Dennis Cox but did not match me or any of my other DNA collaborating cousins. Eric noted that while I was a descendant of John and his first wife Elinor, John had two other wives (after the previous ones had died). Eric descends from John's second wife Isabella. This gives me a whole new line of descendants to trace.

Mtn. View Family History Fun Fact!

Jim Cochran

Former Mountain View mayor Jim Cochran's great-grandfather, John Cochran, was born in 1834 in Northern Ireland. John's family lived in an area of south Belfast called Sandy Row. Sandy Row is one of the oldest neighborhoods in Belfast, widely known for its Loyalist traditions. In 1690, King William III passed through Sandy Row to engage in the Battle of the Boyne, in which he was the victor against the former King James II. This victory is commemorated in Sandy Row each July 12. A portrait of King William at the entrance to the neighborhood recalls the connection between King William and Sandy Row.

John Cochran left Northern Ireland for Portland, Ontario, Canada, which is where Jim's grandfather Robert was born. John and his wife Martha left Canada with their four children and settled on a farm in Warren County, Iowa, where Jim's father Charles was born. Jim was born on another farm in the same county. Jim first came to California the summer before he graduated from Iowa State College, staying with his sister's family in San Diego. After graduating, he interviewed for a job there and relocated. After moving to Mountain View, Jim met and married Alice Liddle. Jim and Alice have a daughter Laura, who is now a principal of a charter school, and a son Bobby, who is a professional photographer. Much of Bobby's work is with bands on tour in the USA and Europe.

Jim started his career with ten years as an Industrial Engineer, then twenty years as a Facilities Manager at Teledyne Semiconductor, in Mountain View. Looking back on his years on council from 1989 to 1996, Jim says he is most proud of the work done to revitalize Castro Street, which included completion of the new City Hall and Center for the Performing Arts. While on council, Jim started his own safety and consulting business, where he worked until his retirement.

Jim and Alice still live together in the home he purchased as a bachelor on Thaddeus Drive in the Monta Loma neighborhood. This summer Jim and Alice are celebrating their 55th wedding anniversary!

MV Public Safety History

By Pamela Baird
MVHA President

Firefighting and public safety have been a concern for cities and towns for thousands of years. The widespread use of wood as a building material means that almost every building is a fire risk. Even buildings constructed of stone have ceiling supports or interior walls built with wood.

Major dramatic fires, such as the 1666 Great Fire of London and the 1871 Great Chicago Fire, destroyed large sections of the city, killed numerous people, left many residents homeless and businesses destroyed. Firefighters were stymied by the primitive methods of fighting fires.

Even Mountain View has had significant building fires. The Presbyterian Church, then located on the corner of Castro and Church streets, was destroyed in 1911 by a fire caused by an overheated stove pipe.

On March 18, 1928, an arsonist set fire to Saint Joseph's Catholic Church, destroying the building. A six-alarm fire on October 24, 1995, swept through the Minton Lumber and Supply Company on Evelyn Street. The facility was nearly destroyed. Firefighters from nine agencies helped fight the fire.

This year the City of Mountain View Fire Department is celebrating 150 years of service. It is one of the oldest officially formed fire departments west of the Mississippi.

On April 1, 1874, the "Mountain View Station Hook & Ladder Co. No. 1" was formed when 50 of the town's civic minded residents gathered at the "Rogers & Rogers" Department Store. The organization was an all volunteer effort. In 1964, the volunteer organization was disbanded, and the Mtn. View Fire Department (MVFD) became a professional paid organization. Today the MVFD operates five stations and has a paid staff of over 80 people.

Public safety has been a necessary part of civic life. Policing in what would become the United States of America arose from the law enforcement systems in European countries. Citizen volunteers, as well as watch groups, constables and sheriffs monitored the behavior of residents, watched for public intoxication, theft, gambling and acts of violence. In 1631 an early night watch group was formed in Boston. The first organized, publicly funded professional full-time police services were established in Boston in 1838, New York in 1844, and Philadelphia in 1854.

The Mountain View Police Department (MVPD) was formed after the city was incorporated in 1902. For many years it consisted of a single officer. In 1909, the first dedicated City Hall building was erected. It housed the police department and included a jail cell, in addition to city offices and the library. The original uniform was tan but was changed to dark blue in 1939 to distinguish the MVPD officers from the Naval officers stationed at nearby Moffett Air Station.

The first dedicated police station was built at 947 Villa Street in 1952 and originally housed an 11 man department. The upper floor also housed the Santa Clara North County courthouse. The courts were eventually relocated to the courthouse in Palo Alto and the top floor was repurposed as offices. By the time the MVPD relocated to the current station in 1980, the department had grown to over 100 officers and support staff.

For a brief period in the early 1970s, the department drove Rambler patrol cars. Mountain View was one of the first agencies in the area to use canines. The dogs were bred in Germany and cost and astonishing $1,100 each at a time when a new home in Rex Manor cost $6,000–$7,000.

Today, the Police Department employs over 140 individuals in a variety of specialties, such as traffic control, crisis negotiation, canine services, and detective work. Other staff members work in various administrative functions.

Mountain View is fortunate to have two dedicated and professional service agencies that connect and protect our community. Learn more about their history at the MVHA August 4 ice cream social at the Community Center. See page 1 of the newsletter for details. We hope to see you there!

Memories of a 1940s MV Police Clerk

By David P. Salinero
MVHA Member

"I need someone who can type and file—and can speak Spanish."

This is probably what Police Chief Art Excell uttered in the spring of 1943 at a typing class of Mountain View Union High School on Castro Street. The teacher directed him to my mother, Juanita Salinero (nee Bautista), who was a graduating senior that year. Thus began her employment at the Mountain View Police Department (MVPD) and she would no longer work summers in the fruit sheds and canneries.

My mother would work in an office at the "old" Town Hall at 401 Castro Street until just before the birth of her first child in 1951. When she started, she was the only bilingual employee in the office and sometimes the only female. So, as needed, she would help with the communication between the officers and the public.

Her duties included answering the phone, typing arrest reports, translating for Spanish speakers, registering bicycles, and other odd jobs around the office. One unique duty was flipping a switch that turned on a light hanging above the intersection of Castro and Villa streets. This was before police radios came into use at the MVPD. At the time, a cop was assigned to walk the downtown beat. If the policeman saw the light turn on, it was his signal that something was up, and he should call the office to find out what was the problem. Juanita would then relay instructions to the officer.

She also translated Spanish to English as-needed for the court located in the Town Hall building next to the police department. As you can imagine, there would be occasions when her help was needed when dealing with folks who only spoke Spanish and were in trouble with the law. Typically, the charges would have to do with drunkenness or fighting.

The police department was like a family at that time. The department in 1943 had only a few sworn officers. But the number of officers would increase by the late 1940s. Excell would later retire, and Art Nielsen took over as chief in 1952.

Farewell to Moffett Field Hangar 3

After 80 years of existence, a major component of the "skyline" at Moffett Field will be no more. Hangar 3 was completed in 1943 after just ten months of construction. Massive fir timbers were shaped into 50 giant arches to form the unique shape (steel was reserved for direct use in the war effort.) Because of the tight time frame for construction, comprehensive repairs were needed only three years after its completion. Substantial engineering challenges remained throughout the lifespan of the building.

Hangar 3 is huge—1,110 feet long x 290 feet wide x 190 feet high. Originally built to house anti-submarine blimps, after World War II Hangar 3 was used to house and repair aircraft. The Navy used Hangar 3 for a variety of other uses as well.

In 1994 Moffett Naval Air Station was closed. 1,875 acres were transferred to NASA. The same year Hangar 3 became the home of the 129th Rescue Wing of the California Air National Guard.

Planetary Ventures signed a 60-year lease for 1,000 acres at Moffett Field in 2014. Under the terms of their lease with NASA Google agreed to repair the three hangars at Moffett. Five years later Hangar 3 was determined to be no longer safe or usable because of continuously increasing damage. No viable or affordable solutions to save the edifice were identified.

Demolition started earlier this year and will be completed by March of 2025. A comprehensive history of Hangar 3 can be seen at https://historicproperties.arc.nasa.gov/h3historysite/index/.

Ciao! Two Goodbyes & One Hello to El Camino Italian Classics

Two classic Italian-American restaurants on El Camino Real closed their doors on June 22, much to the sadness of pasta-loving patrons throughout the South Bay. After 52 years, Fiorillo's welcomed its last diners in Santa Clara. Up the road in Sunnyvale, the 67-year old Pezzella's Villa Napoli also said "ciao" after a long and successful run. Both restaurants were owned and operated by local multi-generational Italian-American families (The Fiorillos and Pezzellas are cousins) who decided now was the right time to move on to other ventures. For Mountain View-history lovers, the closure of Pezzella's may hit especially hard—in addition to Italian classics it was one of the last places to serve the locally-famous "Parisian Burger" that originated at Linda's Drive-In in Mtn. View.

In happier news, one of Mtn. View's oldest restaurants is back on El Camino but in a new building and with a new name! Frankie, Johnnie, & Luigi Too! (FJ&L) operated from 1956 to 2021 at 939 El Camino Real. It owners, the D'Ambrosio family decided to redevelop the property with a memory-care residential housing development. The ground-floor of the new building houses a re-imagined FJ&L now named Giorgio's to match the other restaurants the family owns in nearby cities. The menu and the classic "pizzeria" neon sign out front on El Camino should look very familiar to FJ&L fans!

Artwork inside the new Giorgio's Italian Grill & Pizzeria on El Camino Real chronicles the site's long history as the home of Frankie, Johnnie, & Luigi Too!

It shows two things that have nearly been erased from the landscape in Mountain View: A phone booth and an apricot orchard. Here we see a MVPD officer using a phone booth to dictate a report. There's only one apricot orchard left in Mountain View and we don't know how many phone booth are left!
