President's Message

AMERICA 250

This year we are commemorating the 250th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. Also known by the tongue twisters- Semiquincentennial, Bisesquicentennial, the Sestercentennial, or the Quarter Millennium. As we know, the most memorable sentence contains the phrase "that all men are created equal".

Over the past few months, I've been thinking about this famous document and what it means to me as an individual, to history and to our nation. As a member of the Los Altos History Museum exhibit committee, we have been discussing the upcoming 250th exhibit and what should or should not be included. Exhibit curator Amy Ellison, PhD, has been exploring and expanding the scope of the exhibit- pushing us to think about its impact, the groups of people not mentioned and how the document has been interpreted over the past 250 years. The new exhibit will be on display June 18--November 8.

Recently I was interviewed by Rachel Burnstein, a local historian and educational researcher. She is working on a Declaration of Independence project- talking to local people about their thoughts. In our discussion she asked about my earliest knowledge (which was elementary school) of the Declaration. As a young student, I studied the lists of Grievances contained in the Declaration and I remember thinking- "wow- that's a long list. No wonder the people were upset with the British government." But it takes more study to understand the full scope of the Declaration.

In my opinion, the most dramatic reference to the Declaration is that by Abraham Lincoln in the Gettysburg Address. Lincoln ties the document to the founding and ideals of our nation "Fourscore and seven years ago, our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal". Today those remain powerful words. Let us hope that we as a people, can continue to pursue that mutual pledge to each other as contained in Declaration.

Treasurer's Report

Through Q1 2026

—Anthea Chung, Treasurer

The Mountain View Historical Association is a nonprofit organization focused on preserving and promoting local history. We appreciate the continued support of our members, donors, and community.

In the first quarter of 2026, the Association received $1,757 in total income, including membership dues ($1,225), walking tour fees ($176), and interest income from cash on hand ($356).

Total expenses for the period were $688, supporting newsletter and community events ($466) and other administrative costs ($222). Careful financial management resulted in a net surplus of $1,068, strengthening the Association's ability to continue its work.

Compared to the same period in 2025, income was lower ($1,757 vs. $2,002), primarily due to reduced walking tour activity and the absence of speaking fees. However, expenses were also significantly lower ($688 vs. $1,053), resulting in a higher net surplus ($1,068 vs. $949).

As of March 31, 2026, the Association held $80,524 in cash, including $15,928 in checking accounts and $64,596 in Certificates of Deposit. Interest earned on these funds continues to support ongoing operations while preserving the Association's reserves for the future.

Mountain View Family History Spotlight

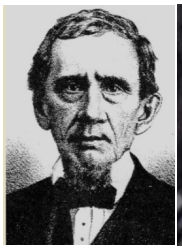

by Robert Cox, MVHA Vice President

Vice Mayor Chris Clark

Former Mayor and current Vice Mayor Chris Clark's family tree has branches almost all of which reach back to colonial America. Chris has ancestors from England, Scotland, Wales, Ulster, France, Germany, and Sweden. His fourth great-grandfather Charles Edgar Clark, Sr. was born in 1795 in Perthshire Scotland, immigrating first to Pennsylvania, then later finding his way to Henderson County, Illinois. Charles's son, Charles Edgar Clark, Jr. married Mariah Cox in 1862. So, who knows, Chris and I may be distant relatives!

One of Chris's eighth great-grandfathers, Rev. Nathaniel Jenkins, was a Baptist minister and an early advocate of religious liberty. Born in 1678 in Tyngraig, Wales, he immigrated to colonial New Jersey in 1710, and was elected a member of the colonial council. In 1721, a bill was introduced "to punish such as denied the doctrines of the Trinity, the Divinity of Christ, and the inspiration of the Scriptures". Jenkins spoke passionately against the bill, declaring "although I believe these doctrines as firmly as the warmest advocate of the bill, yet I would never consent to oppose those who rejected them with law or with any other weapon than argument."

Benjamin Coleman Coghill (1803-1880)

Mariah (Cox) Clark (1843-1919)

One of Chris's fourth great-grandfathers, Benjamin Coleman Coghill, was likely his first ancestor to live in Rozetta, Illinois, where Chris was born. Coghill was born in 1803 in Henrico County, Virginia. Coghill had three wives, Millicent, Mary, and Loucie. Chris is descended through Mary. Loucie was a school teacher in Hannibal, Missouri, where Samuel Clemens (a.k.a. Mark Twain) was one of her students. Loucie was not fond of the Clemens family, referring to them as "inveterate liars." I suppose a world-renown author of fiction needs to start somewhere!

Like many Virginians of the time, Coghill owned slaves. Shaken by the Nat Turner rebellion of 1831, he decided to liberate his slaves and relocate to a Free State. Coghill wrote, "I procured good homes as I could for the aged and sent all who were young to Liberia." Then in the spring of 1836, Coghill and his family set out for what is now Henderson County, Illinois, arriving in May. Chris's family has had a strong and continuous presence in the county since then.

Chris was born in 1983 and developed an interest in politics at a young age. He watched CNBC and CNN from a giant motorized satellite dish on the family farm. Seeking broader life experiences, he learned about the Congressional Page Program, and was nominated to the program by Democratic Congressman Lane Evans. At age 16, Chris was off to Washington, D.C.! Chris was encouraged by the Page School counselor to apply for college summer school programs and so ended up Stanford, both for the summer program and later as an undergraduate. After graduation, Chris joined AT & T's rotational management program, working on the IPhone launch team.

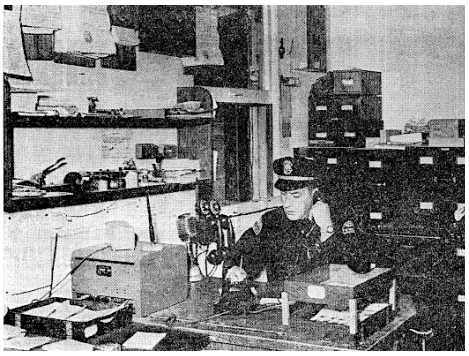

Chris came to Mountain View when he joined Loopt, a startup company providing smartphone location services. Chris writes, "I rented an apartment off Whisman Road, and I quickly found the community welcoming and accessible. Mountain View felt like a place where I could put down roots after years of

MVPD's Home Has Evolved for over a Century

Editor's note: A version of this article appeared in November 2025 issue of The Lamppost, the quarterly newsletter of the Old Mountain View Neighborhood Association (OMVNA.org).

by Jerry Steach

A visit to the Mountain View Police Department, located inside the Police and Fire Administration building at Villa and Franklin streets, reveals contrasts with its history and its present. A display along a hallway showcases outdated equipment the MVPD has used over the decades, which is situated just around a corner from the department's state-of-the-art communications center. Also presenting a contrast is that the 1980 Police and Fire Administration building, which has gotten a bit long in the tooth to sufficiently accommodate the needs of two public-safety departments serving a city at the heart of Silicon Valley modernity.

It's not just the agency operations that are located in the easily recognizable building, which has been a fixture of downtown for more than 45 years. An emergency dispatch center, fire department administration, emergency operations, and support staff all work out of the same location.

However, plans are underway to replace and modernize the entire complex, expanding it more fully across the 4.3-acre site -- including sleeping quarters for police and fire personnel who live far from Mountain View – and address the city's evolving public-safety needs. The city council is presently reviewing those plans.

It won't be the first time the MVPD, established in 1902, has moved into larger and updated facilities. Doug Johnson, the department's resident historian who's a veritable fountain of information on the subject, wrote an excellent history of the MVPD. In it he points out that the department's first station was "….just an office within the 1909 City Hall at Castro and California Street. That office was divided into two rooms, one of which was the jail. The jail consisted of an iron cage within a slightly larger room, and most of the jail's 'tenants' were transients passing through town looking for a warm, dry place to sleep."

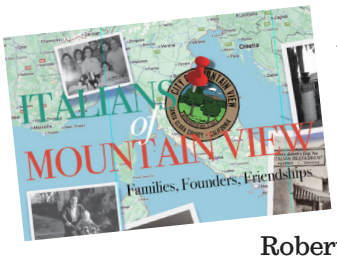

By 1952, the MVPD force of 11 officers were working out of an increasingly crowded office within City Hall – so crowded interviews often had to be conducted outside in patrol cars. These conditions necessitated the construction of a new police station at 947 Villa St. Over following years, additions made to that building weren't sufficient for a department that was, in Doug's words, "bursting at the seams." Mountain View, in the late 1970s, finally approved plans for what is now the present Police and Fire Administration building, constructed kitty-corner from the previous home of MVPD.

Certainly, Mountain View's finest will welcome their eventual new home – a vast change and improvement over the department's humble beginnings more a century and a quarter ago.

Winter program: "Italians of Mountain View" was a family affair

Another large crowd attended the February 1 history event held at the library. Robert Cox presented a comprehensive and expansive program detailing many Italian families, their descendants and the businesses that they created. Using maps and photographs, Robert showed the integral part that these families played in our local history.

Robert located and invited family members to attend, which provided an extra fun aspect to the gathering. Some of those attending added their perspective as well. After snacks, interested participants visited the History Center upstairs to see family artifacts from our collection. The event even brought old friends back together, for exchanging renewed memories.

Community Outreach

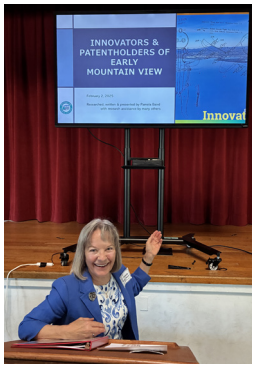

Walking on Castro—

Three walking tours for Stevenson School third graders were conducted by Pamela Baird in February. Prior to the walks on Castro Street, Pamela presented a forty-minute program at the school to preview and explain the history of early Mountain View. After the walk the students visited City Hall to learn more about our community.

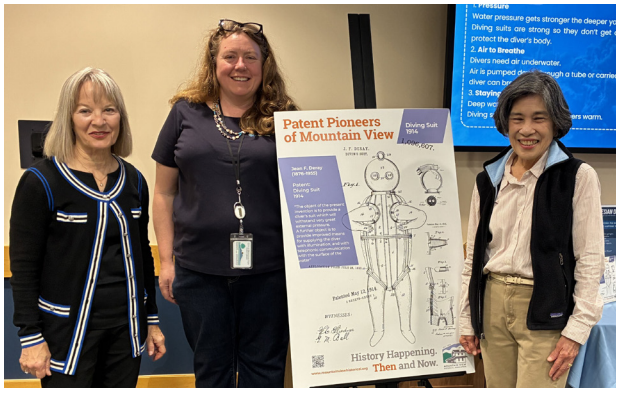

Patentholders of MV presented to SIR—

The March monthly meeting of SIR (Sons in Retirement) featured Pamela Baird presenting a program about patentholders of Mountain View. The presentation covered patents issued between 1868 and the 1950s.

Prior to the start of the program, a singing group serenaded those attending with a fun song preview of some of the inventions—the first time we have been introduced with music!

MVHA and the MV Library team up for STEM—

Pamela Baird, Renee Kidson and Elena Lopez

MVHA and the MV Library teamed up to produce a hands-on STEAM program that introduced kids to real patents created in Mountain View. Librarian Renee Kidson created fun stations for participants to test their creativity. Elena Lopez and Pamela Baird explained the features of the diving suit patented by Jean DeRay.

Burma Calling:
One Woman's Journey

— by M. Elena Lopez

It was a time of fear and uncertainty. Peasant rebellions, ethnic violence, strikes, and riots convulsed the British colony of Burma (Myanmar) throughout the 1930s. Amid this unrest, a young Baptist teacher from Mountain View arrived in Rangoon on February 20, 1934.

Elizabeth Margery Taylor was born in Puyallup, Washington in 1908. By 1914, her father J. J. Taylor had moved the family to Mountain View, where he worked for the First National Bank. The Taylors were active in the Baptist Church, whose Foreign and Home Missionary Society likely inspired Taylor's interest in overseas service. Mountain View residents also learned about Asian religions from a1926 lecture by the Rev. W. Hopkins, who served at the Baptist mission in India.

As a student at Mountain View Union High School, Taylor consistently made it to the honor roll. She belonged to the Girls Glee Club and to the Orchestra, where she played the cello and piano. She accompanied the Glee Club in its presentations, played "countless piano solos," and performed one of the leading roles in the Dramatic Club's "Penrod." The caption next to her 1925 graduating class photo reads, "Her voice was always soft, gentle and low…"

Taylor pursued higher education with determination. She earned a Bachelor of Music degree from the University of Redlands and a Bachelor of Arts from San Jose State Teachers College, and also studied at the Baptist Divinity School in Berkeley. In December 1933, she received her formal commission to teach missionary children at the American School in Taunggyi.

> "Her voice was always soft, gentle and low..."

Taunggyi, located at an elevation of 4,712 feet, had grown from a small Shan village into a British administrative center. Known as the "City of Music," it offered a vibrant cultural scene that suited Taylor's musical passions. In a 1936 letter to her Mountain View friends, she described Saturday military band performances, noting drummers "twirling their sticks and making all sorts of fancy designs in the air."

Taylor was deeply committed to music education. She asked friends to send prizes for her piano students, preferring books about music and musicians. She also sought ideas for children's plays and operettas, expressing a longing to spend hours in a well-stocked music or book store.

In 1937, a lady tourist persuaded Taylor to travel with her to India. Within four days, she had arranged her journey and departed Taunggyi. Her travels took her from the Himalayan north to southern India. From the Hotel Mount Everest in Darjeeling, she wrote,"The world's 'forehead' is just being veiled by a cloud curtain! Kangchenjunga, 28,156 ft. high, only appears at dawn and sunset."

When Taylor's initial term in Burma ended in 1939, she returned to the United States. Although she planned to go back, World War II interrupted travel. She resumed teaching in Burma in 1946 but between 1953-1959 was not on active duty. Illness forced her return to the United States in 1964. She later served in the Philippines before retiring in 1973. At the Central Philippine University she organized a Bell Ringers choir that continues to perform today.

Elizabeth Margery Taylor died in Fresno in 1991, leaving behind a life marked by dedication to education, music, and international service.

1976 A year of commemoration & celebration

The Bicentennial recognition of the signing of the Declaration of Independence was a year long effort, both locally and nationally. Congress created the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration (ARBA) in 1973, which it charged with encouraging and coordinating locally sponsored events. A look at the Wikipedia website reveals a huge number of events that were conducted around the country in 1976. https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/United_States_Bicentennial

The city of Mountain View formed a volunteer committee of at least 16 members to organize efforts to be held throughout 1976. Local planning efforts (and some events) commenced in 1975 and took up most of that year. The committee, led by Joseph Cusimano, a prominent resident and council member, created sub-committees to develop ideas and programs.

In 1975 outreach began to recruit volunteers and raise awareness of the upcoming events. On May 4, 1975, a marker to recognize John W. Whisman, an early settler in the north Bayshore area, was placed inside the main gate at Moffett field.

Two flags, one created for the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration (ARBA) and the famous Betsy Ross flag, were raised in a ceremony on July 4,1975, at Rengstorff Park. The city could raise the ARBA flag because Mountain View met the requirements to be an official Bicentennial city.

Later in July the Moffett Field Naval Air Station hosted an open house and air show. The city sponsored a booth to provide information about the Bicentennial.

On August 24,1975, the Filipino-American Senior Citizens of the Bay Area presented a daylong event. Held at Rengstorff Park, the festivities included a fashion show, music, dancing and food. In November the Bicentennial committee hosted a booth at the three day holiday bazaar for the MV Cultural Arts Council (precursor to the Visual Arts Committee) held at the Community Center.

In the next two issues of this newsletter, we will explore the planning and events held in 1976. Stay tuned—some are really fun and creative!

Local WWI Soldier becomes a Museum Greeter

After President Pamela Baird and Board Member David Salinero visited the World War I exhibit at the Moffett Field Museum, they remembered MVHA has an authentic U.S. Army uniform from 1917. David's project to catalog artifacts in the History Center at the library and and Senior Librarian James Thadjudeen easily located Glenn Wilson's perfectly preserved WW1 uniform. Glenn's son, also named Glenn, had wisely decided to have it cleaned and professionaly packed away before donating it to the Mountain View Historical Association.

In addition, Glenn donated a copy of his father's memoir to accompany his uniform and document the family's history as early residents and business owners of Mountain View.

When you decide to pay a visit to the Moffett Field Museum, be sure to explore the World War I trench. And thanks to MVHA stop by to greet Glenn in full uniform at the entrance to the museum, along with a brief biography and excerpt from his memoir. His uniform is on loan.

The WWI Exhibit runs through May, 2026. Hours are Wednesday through Saturday, 10am–3pm. moffettfieldmuseum.org

Glenn W. Wilson 1917

Glenn William Wilson, was born January 2, 1887 in Dover, Minnesota, to William and Bertha Wilson. He came to California after college to attend Stanford University, where he received a master's degree in electrical engineering in 1917.

He married Mary Chadwick Eastwood on 30 July 1917 and left for the Army two days later. After training at what was then Camp Fremont in Menlo Park, he shipped out on a troop train to New York. He arrived in France three months before the Armistise was signed, and spent the winter building and maintaining housing for soldiers returning to the U.S. from the trenches in France.

He and his family lived in Mountain View, where, in 1923, he started Valley Electric, specializing in wiring and electrical contracting. He ran the business until 1964, when his son, Glenn E. Wilson, took over.

Glenn William Wilson, founder of Valley Electric in Mountain View, died Dec. 17, 1985 in Los Altos Hills, California. He was 98 years old.

Where there's a Will, there's a Way! by Robert Cox

Some of the most detailed information that you can discover about family relationships are in court records. Among the most valuable for genealogical research are wills and the associated probate records. In particular, in the years before census records recorded individuals by name, these records are among the few official government records that explicitly include family relationships.

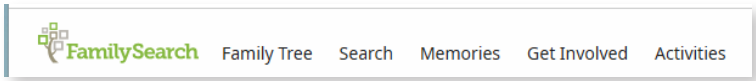

A will typically begin with a statement that the testator (the one making the will) is of sound mind and body, that this is his last will and testament, and that all previous wills are revoked. After that, the testator typically says that he intends his debts to be paid. Finally, the testator lists each item of personal property and to whom that item is willed. There are usually provisions indicating to whom each item would go in case the person willed the property passes away. When property is willed to a minor, there are often stipulations on how much the minor will inherit and under what circumstances. For example, the will could indicate that a minor would only receive certain money when he reaches a certain age. When family members are willed property, their relationship to the testator is usually specified.

In the absence of a will, an application for letters of administration is generally filed. This document will list information about the deceased's next of kin and his property. For example, when my father's uncle, Clinton Cox, passed away, with no widow or children, his brothers filed a document with the judge of the probate court stating:
The undesigned hereby makes application to be appointed as administrator of the estate of Clinton A. Cox late of the City of Cleveland in said county, deceased, and on oath states that said Clinton A. Cox died on or about the 6th day of April 1928, intestate, leaving no widow and the following named persons, his next of kin:

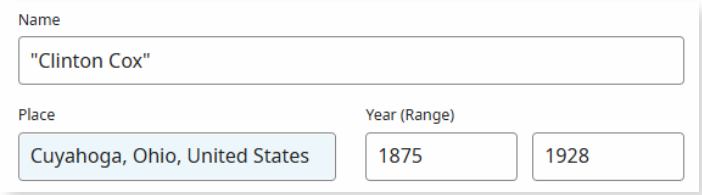

Names	Degree of Kinship	Age	P. O. Address
William H. Cox	Brother	46	266 Prospect St. Elyria, Ohio
Burton F. Cox	"	52	1929 E. 59 St. Cleveland, Ohio

Applicant further states that there is not to his knowledge and last will and testament of said decedent in existence. That the whole personal estate of said decedent consists of: one Studebaker Automobile coupe 1921; two Boston Bull Terriers; Eighteen Dollars in Cash; Household Furniture. The real estate of said decedent consists of house and lot at No. 1507 E. 65th St., Cleveland, Ohio.

A great place to find wills and other probate records is by using the free FamilySearch "Full Text" feature. Go to www.familysearch.org and click on the "Search" drop down menu. From there select "Full Text." This will bring up a form where you can enter and name, place, and year range:

Putting the name in quotes let's you indicate that the first and last name should appear together in the searched document.

bouncing around for school and work." Realizing how much local government impacts daily life, Chris applied for, and was appointed to, the city's Human Relations and Planning Commissions, and served on the council from 2013–2021. He served as mayor in 2014. Chris was reelected for a third term in 2024. Looking back on his public service in our city, Chris is most proud of completing the Community Center, Aquatics Center, and extensions to the city's trail systems.

As the first gay mayor, Chris also cherishes the first time the city flew the Pride flag at the Civic Center Plaza. After the event, city staff handed Chris a box filled with deeply personal notes that had been spontaneously left at the base of the flagpole by community members sharing their journeys and thanking the council for making them feel safe. Chris notes, "Even seemingly small, symbolic actions can matter more than you expect."

Chris offers the following advice to young people pursuing a career in tech or politics: "Take calculated risks while time is still on your side, especially when rare and exciting opportunities arise. Don't be afraid to make mistakes, learn from them, and adjust course. Ask for help. Mentors are often closer and more accessible than you think. And when you succeed, pay it forward. That's how careers—and communities—are built."

Most of the MVHA board members took a break from organizational duties to meet socially for a glass of wine at Rootstock on Castro. Zoom meetings are convenient for the board, but cannot replace the camaraderie of in-person gatherings. Past president Nick Perry was able to break away from his home base in San Francisco. Nick authored two books in the Arcadia Images of America series. Mountain View features historic images of our city, and Mountain View Then and Now compares past and more current photos of local sites. These books and others will be available at neighborhood picnics and ice cream socials this summer. Look for the MVHA table at these gatherings. We'd love to hear remembrances of your neighborhood and our city.

After years of restoration work, Hangar One has reopened.

A ceremony was held on March 20 for local civic leaders and elected officials.

On March 23, members of the "Save Hangar One" group and other community members attended a reopening ceremony.

Both groups were able to experience the amazing transformation of the historic building. Originally built in 1933, the updated version looks very similar to the original, but with more skylights that brighten the interior. Toxic contamination was removed from the area.

The impressive structure spans 1,133 feet in length, 308 feet in width, and rises to a height of 198 feet. It is one of the largest free-standing structures in the world.

The restoration was done by Planetary Ventures, a division of Google. You can learn more about the project at https://www.nasa.gov/centers-and-facilities/ames/hangar-one-restoration-project/

Construction of Hangar 1 began in 1931 and was officially completed on July 1, 1933. It was designed by staff architects and engineers of the Department of the Navy's Bureau of Yards & Docks, with Rear Admiral A.L. Parsons in charge.

The principal designer was Ernest L. Wolf, a civil engineer employed by the Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation of Akron, Ohio. Originally constructed by the U.S. Navy as the centerpiece of NAS (Naval Air Station) Sunnyvale, the U.S. Army took over the administration of the base in 1935 following the destruction of the dirigible U.S.S. Macon.

The base remained under Army control until 1942 when the Navy reassumed control. The Navy retained ownership of NAS Moffett Field until 1994, when the base was closed as part of the Base Realignment and Closure (BRAC) process. At that time, the Navy turned NAS Moffett Field over to NASA.

Until NAS Moffett Field was decommissioned in 1994, the Navy used Hangar 1 to house a variety of aircraft, in particular P2 and P3 Orion surveillance aircraft.
